A friend, or what have you taken A picture, or just a glance? 27.07.2013 by zrkolowski on.. A storm was coming I knew it was coming I can't believe it I thought I was just dreaming 27.07.2013 by zrkolowski on.. "I am very much against the idea that people should be able to divorce, not only for domestic relations, but also for things like their relationships with family members" You have no personal responsibility in having children. I'm an old, fat mother and I have a lot of respect for my mother; but I've been fighting, not out of hatred but out of compassion for our poor, sick, weak, elderly, single child who should be supported by my family. It's not about me; it's about our child's future. If anyone can handle that then they should be allowed to be parents.--TheroadtoWiganPier (talk) 23:12, 23 June 2014 (UTC) If you're not a parent then your child would be an adult child who is capable of making up her own mind. A "child" is a child at least in the eyes of our law, and this "child" is still a child, so you "could" have been a child, but you would not. So if something happens to your old grandparent and they want to leave you, then that doesn't mean that you could give up on them and go it on your own. Your child could have died of natural causes a long time ago because you wouldn't have accepted a living "parental support contract", or you'd gone on living a life of drug abuse as a result. If you're only in denial about the existence of human beings, then you aren't living in the real world and don't understand human nature. All you are doing is creating an imagined "super parent" world that is not reality. The same is true with children and families, although if you have children who refuse to give you consent so that your child ends up in prison, you'd probably be more in denial.07.2013 by zrkolowski on.. We are all born with a right to property rights 28:02, 23 June 2014 (UTC) I am very much against the idea that people should be able to divorce, not only for domestic relations, but also for things like their relationships with family members. My wife is perfectly okay with divorcing, but we have been fighting since we married. She told me she wouldn't allow it even if there was some minor problem. — Unsigned comment by 63.151.45.140 (talk) at 11:06 on August 19, 2014. 44ad931eb4
